Woodacity, making the impossible possible

Quadpack introduces the first caps of its patented full-wood family

Wood is technically challenging. A natural material with a well-known elasticity and water permeability, it's almost impossible to be used as a beauty packaging component without a plastic insert. Until now. Quadpack Wood faced the challenges and, after years of research, is launching Woodacity®, a patented full-wood solution that matches sustainability with innovation. The first members of the family are three monomaterial caps for fragrance and skincare.

Quadpack Wood's expertise was essential in such an ambitious project: being a leader in wood components for cosmetics, it has the best minds and equipment required for the challenge. A team of designers, engineers and technicians investigated the material in different conditions, shapes and combinations to allow it to have the same functional properties and stability than plastic. Woodacity® is the result of many steps, starting with storage in controlled conditions to drying, shaping and lacquering.

"Woodacity® is a project that seemed impossible a few years ago, and it's now a reality. It's a full wood innovation that brings sustainable added-value to beauty brands," celebrates Pierre-Antoine Henry, Quadpack's Head of Categories.

New developments are on the way, including Quadpack's own Q-line products that will have full-wood versions available. "Woodacity® is a new way of looking at wood innovation. Our goal is to have our wood products to be either monomaterial, refillable or easily disassembled," says Henry.
